Natural disasters can change people's lives in just a few minutes. An earthquake shakes the ground and can destroy buildings, while a flood covers streets and homes with water. In some countries, people are afraid of volcanoes, which can erupt and send hot lava down the mountain. Scientists try to warn people before a disaster happens, but this is not always possible. The most important thing is to stay calm, follow the safety rules and help one another. After a disaster, whole communities work together to rebuild what they have lost.
